

ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus performs testing, sorting, and packaging of partially defective semiconductor memory devices in order to construct usable memory chip or module packages that meet the specification of a fully or partially functional package.